Commissioner W. C. Bryan Makes Annual Report to Hon. J. F. Lymburn—23 Murdered, 71 Persons Suicided

Reports

During the year ending Dec. 31, 1929, a total of 23 persons were murdered in Alberta, while 71 took their own lives by suicide, according to the annual report of the Attorney General, Hon. J. F. Lymburn, presented to the Legislature on Thursday by Colonel W. C. Bryan, commissioner of the force, with Hon. J. F. Lymburn, attorney general, presiding.

The year was one of exceptional activity on the part of the police, more than 1,000 arrests being made, and the carrying out of the routine duties of the force and in assisting other departments.

ONE MURDER MYSTERY

Of the murders committed, the only one unsolved was that of Julia Johnson, who resided west of Leduc and which case came under investigation. One of the outstanding features of the police work was the solution of the Barrett-McDonald murder, which took place at Smoky Lake last October.

The year was one of exceptional activity on the part of the police, more than 1,000 arrests being made, and the carrying out of the routine duties of the force and in assisting other departments.

GOOD ANYWHERE

Payment in certificates of a price to producers approximating cost of production was advised in the resolution, advanced by George Bevington, Minister of Agriculture, and approved by the Legislature.

Actually, explained Mr. Bevington, the certificates would be used to "trade dollars," not to be used for redemption of wheat, but good outside Canada for any other commodity.

Bulletin News Special
NEW YORK, Jan. 22—"Why does a man remain a bachelor," asks a writer, and an explanation, if such is possible, was given through the replies of several widely known unmarried men.

clat, essayist and editor, known as the most popular bachelor in New York, admits that fate had something to do with his matrimonial state, or lack of such.

"A philosopher has said that every man moves inevitably toward matrimony and toward the grave," Mr. Towne said. "I believe that is true in the abstract, but I don't know whether I think that when I was in my twenties I never looked at a girl without thinking how it would seem to be to marry her. I have never even seen a man's mind the thought of marriage and a home is supreme."

Enjoy Fireplace.

"I have a strong nature, I like to mingle with my fellow beings. But despite this there is in me a strong domestic sense. Yes, you might call me a home body, but I have never liked the theatre, the opera, or an old-fashioned ball. I enjoy open fire and books in my home."

In love. "One lonely year in this country, my own romance was first revealed to me. I was too young and too poor to marry, but I was sure this would be a perfect wife. I have no regret that I ever loved her. I have no regret for bread and its necessities in New York—she fell in love with someone else and married him. I have three healthy children. It was a consolation that she seemed to have forgotten what I remembered as sorrowful days of love."

He Loved a Girl

"I was genuinely and more maturely in love with a girl in Brooklyn. I had a very good reason for loving her. I had no memory of my youth when she returned from a visit to the west, but this was not to be. My romance ended in a few days. I was not a young man. I could tell of two years of anguish to which I never alluded while they were passing. The emotions of youth are

"to hide them."

The third of his experiences with "supercute" girls was with a beautiful actress. "It was as if a magic cement had been engaged to me," he said. "We were so engaged, I visited her (that lovely actress) in her home in Washington, in one of the year's love-fest months, April. Washington had also seemed to me a garden."

"But," he added, "I was desperate. I was quarrelled. I knew I was to blame. I still think I was. But suddenly everything I loved over. There never was anything so bitter as America, there never will be, toward the heroine of this most poetic of my romances. It was easy, the use of humor. But, spare cost, unobtainable."

"I firmly believe that not everyone is destined for matrimony. I am all for matrimony. But I don't think matrimony is for us."

Wires Built In.

Charles L. Wagner, the impressionist, was most successful in his country, who has directed Mary Gagne's concert tours and is singing with her in a series of evenings With Maude Adams, gave succinctly his reasons for being a bachelor. One sentence sufficed: "He would build into his career as a lyric manager, as he assumed the directorship of the opera people. Their positions are growing up children, in his opinion, and therefore require the same treatment that should be given to children. He is a disciplinarian somewhat spotted children. It is a difficult task at best. He is a wife, with her exclamations of "Don't humiliate me!" and "Don't humiliate me!" most decidedly would interfere. Contracts and contractees must be humored. Therefore, Mr. Wagener is wealthy, happy, untroubled and courtly, unmarried and he asserts that he will remain single.

Eugene O'Brien, the blond "An-

Will Never Marry.

"I shall never marry," he declared. "That I decided when I found four women all vying for my affections. I was as fine a comrade in marriage as he is on the golf links or in a tennis game, marriage would be a very agreeable change, but I don't want to marry the poor male at the altar if she is different being she believes she owes him and she takes no pains to conceal from me that she does. I don't see in the friendships women are possible." Harrison Fisher, illustrator and maker of magazine covers, comes from a family of bachelors. "I don't want bachelorhood," I should like to marry and have a real home instead of my studio," he said, "but I am afraid that I cannot do so." He is now 34 years old. As Mr. Dooley said: "A man comes home from his honeymoon trip and the next day at the breakfast table he comes in and raises the devil."

Playwright's View

Edwin Burke, the playwright, who is writing scenarios in Hollywood, answered with disarming honesty, "I never thought of it that way."

To: What guarantee have I that my marriage would not fall as miserably as the matches of my friends have?

Edwin: "I don't know. I don't know. I never thought of it that way."

To: What guarantee have I that my marriage to a Communist would not be a fine institution. I have no word against it. But the conditions of modern life, especially in the great cities, make it impossible to have a permanent marriage to be permanent, not an experiment.

Edwin: "I don't know. I don't know. I never thought of it that way."
